Miami police disperse crowd by David Guetta's relief concert

MIAMI – Police said they dispersed crowds violating social distancing guidelines during David Guetta's coronavirus relief concert in Miami.

There were no arrests made when police broke up groups on the sidewalks far below the two-hour rooftop concert played by the DJ on Saturday, The Miami Herald reported. Florida has prohibited gatherings of more than 10 people during the pandemic.

While some residents in downtown Miami were able to see the concert from their balconies, the relief benefit also drew in over 9 million views on Facebook and nearly 2 million views on YouTube.

The concert raised $700,000, Guetta said in a Facebook post Sunday. The money will go towards four organizations, including Feeding South Florida and the World Health Organization's Solidarity Response Fund.

Florida's coronavirus caseload reached 26,314 with 774 deaths as of Sunday evening, the state's Health department said.

Deputies: Florida man charged for pointing BB gun at golfers

PALM COAST, Fla. – Deputies have arrested a 74-year-old Florida man who allegedly pointed a BB gun at golfers in Palm Coast.

News outlets report that John Robert Orr was upset over rule-breakers, but this is not a story about people violating stay-at-home orders. In fact, many Florida golf courses have remained open for business during the coronavirus pandemic.

Orr told deputies that other players at the Conservatory Golf Course were driving their carts on the putting greens and over a wooden bridge that's designed for walking. He said he tried but couldn't reach the authorities and so decided to take matters into his own hands.

It wasn't immediately clear whether he had a lawyer to comment on his behalf. He was booked into a detention facility on Friday and charged with seven counts of aggravated assault, the Flagler County Sheriff's Office said.
